There's something about filings that glaze my eyes - and for any length of time filings put me in danger of falling into a coma. But unfortunately, whether you hate it or not, when you're running a small business, you need to do a filing, or you'll soon find your desk collapsing under all the paper weights that keep piling up. What do filings assads do? You can make your time to submit as short as possible (the way I've been almost done over the years running the office) or you can submit your time as much fun as possible (what I'm trying to achieve). Let's take a look at some tips that actually reduce the amount of time you spend filing first. The first question about a piece of paper waiting for you to be submitted is, Do I need to submit this document? Many of the documents in the email can go directly into the shredder. For example, what is the point of submitting ads and information letters from other companies? It may also be a good thing to submit a large number of hard copies of documents that you don't need to submit and shouldn't print them in the first place. For example, you don't need to submit a paper copy of an invoice or letter, for example, if your electronic files are organized and you follow proper backup procedures. So when you're working on a pile of filings, you're shredded paper that you can live without. Most of the papers I need to submit are related to the process of doing business, and these documents must be entered into the accounting system before anything else can be done. So, instead of taking a receipt for the printer's toner cartridge and filing under the P of my main filing system, I submit it to my first filing system, a series of folders labeled with months and years. For example, if you purchased a toner cartridge in September 2017, the file will be in with all other invoices, receipts, and other business documents that occurred that month. Then working with the folder at the end of the month and creating all the necessary accounting entries is a simple matter (or, if you haven't done it yourself, give the monthly folder to your accountant or bookkeeper). We run a service business, not retail, so sitting down once a month and working on an account works for me. If you need to keep your account up to date, you'll need to change your monthly folder ideas accordingly. What happens after accounting using monthly folders? However, instead of submitting each document individually depending on the title, submit it logically according to the group. Let's take another look at the printer toner example! Instead of submitting this receipt under the P on the printer's toner cartridge, submit this receipt under office supply - receipt. This not only makes filing faster, but also makes it much easier to find documents later. When you create a filing system split, there is no rule that restricts it to a single character. If so, it complicates your filing unnecessarily slowly. Customize your filing system to benefit from group filing and find the right place to deploy documents faster. For example, instead of labeling a section of the filing system C, there is also a section labeled Client File. The files in Client Files are organized in alphabetical order. The beauty of customizing your filing system in this way is that you can always further subdivide and organize it as needed. Thus, major clients can have file system dividing lines labeled with their names within the Client Files section to make it easier to find documents that are relevant to them. In this example, the filing system label reads B, C, client file, and D. See how easy your filing will be. Another filing tip to speed up your filing: don't forget to customize the alphabet as well. Instead of just having an M-section, label one Mc as well. Another great thing about using a two-step filing system like the one above is that it makes it much easier to physically bring the first stage of the filing system (monthly folder) closer to the workspace. If you have a close, organized place to submit them, you are much more likely to file paperwork immediately rather than stacking them. So put your last, current, and monthly folders in the tray next month or within arm's length in your workspace using concertina files. Most of your filing system (the main filing system you called above is completely across the room or in another room, but to save time, you don't have to stand up to do the first stage filing. The filing tips I've given you so far should help you spend less time filing and prevent brain freezes. But how about making your time more enjoyable? In fact, the only strategy I've come up with here is an overt bribe, which rewards myself with cookies if I file for a certain amount of time. This will work, but if you have a lot of filings to do, it can lead to putting on a lot of pounds. Alternatively, you may take a more artistic approach by using all the different colors for your file folders and using out-of-the-6 fonts and calligraphy for labels. Whether this makes your filing more fun or not, it will certainly make it more attractive. And who knows? Maybe it's much more fun because your filing is so fast that it's so organized.
